Chinese Traditional Philosophy as ABC

(Analytically Biblical Continuation)

A reflection on Chinese philosophy, contemporary science, and the Word of God.

The Human Search for Origin

Chinese philosophy and biblical faith ask similar questions concerning origin, order, and the emergence of the visible world.

气终极之无形

Qi may be viewed as representing ultimate formlessness or hidden potential.

理可数也

Li represents intrinsic order, structure, and pattern. Li admits investigation, measure, and mathematical expression.

道 and Logos

The Chinese translation of John begins with 太初有道, employing Dao while giving it renewed meaning through the Logos.

Science and Information

Modern science increasingly emphasizes information, structure, and organization as fundamental themes.

ABC: Analytically Biblical Continuation

ABC proposes that some philosophical questions within Chinese tradition may find deeper continuation within the biblical worldview.

Reflection

True reconciliation preserves distinctions while revealing deeper unity.

“In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.”

道可道，非常道。

Hallelujah.
Praise be to the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost.
Amen.
